

Craig's list posting for manager position

Heading:

Lululemon Seeks Store Managers Managing Since Age 8...

Text:

Please read the following scenarios. If 1 or more sound familiar, we could be meant for each other.

Scenario #1: Third grade bake sale. Your mom suggests bringing Rice Crispy Treats like last year. You acknowledge her enthusiasm and practical thinking skills, but recognize the chance to move the project from mediocrity to greatness. You motivate her, coach her, encourage her, and pretty soon she's baking gluten-free-walnut-chocolate-oatmeal-thumbprint-crescent-brownie-bars, going on about how she always wanted to start her own cookie company...

Scenario #2: Circa eighth grade. Biology class group project. While your teammates belly-ache about how it would've been way cooler to get the Alaskan Hump-Backed Whale rather than the Maryland Blue-Beaked Mockingbird, you step into the leadership role. You assess the strengths and weaknesses of team members, delegating tasks accordingly. You create a prioritized task list, a full-proof filing system and detailed timeline. The project is completed 2 days prior to deadline, and your little operatic wonder-bird makes the Alaskan Whale look like a fat fish with bad posture.

Scenario#3: No scenario 3. We're kinda busy these days. So, other stuff we're looking for in a store manager:

- You've got a keen eye for talent and development – in 5th grade you had the foresight to see that "last-draft Joey" could be pure greased-lightning with a bit of coaching.
- You're willing to jump in and get your hands dirty, feet wet, hair amuck... (basically, you'll take out the recycling without pulling rank)
- You see feedback and constructive criticism as feedback and constructive criticism.
- When assigned a six hour project, you calmly reply, "I can solve that in 4, Bob" and get it done in 3.75, with time to spare for a mani/pedi.
- You're dedicated to a healthy lifestyle (not to be confused with total obsession, unreasonable fixation, aggregated dependence).
- Working knowledge of MS Office (Word, Excel and Outlook) and the good sense to call on tech-support when necessary.
- Completion of some secondary education will be considered an asset, but hardly a substitution for a working history that is crème de la crop.

To Apply for this position:
(general info here)

If you are seeking a position in a company which fosters and supports health and fitness, personal development, growth, responsibility, and the ability to crack a decent joke or two, please send your cover letter, resume, and goals to the email below.

- A passion for retail. You love working with people in a non-corporate setting. People love working with you in a non-corporate setting. In fact, you could get a whole darn store to join hands and sing Kumbya if you wanted to (but that would be a little weird).

Only those under consideration will be contacted. If you do not hear from us, please accept our utmost appreciation for your interest.

Compensation: DOE (Depending on experience)