Press Release

Featured NAACP Festival Play and ESSENCE Blog Inspiration is holding its Opening Night at the Stella Adler Theater.

"I'm an Actor, They Don't Get It."

Written and Directed by Tiffany Black

Hollywood, CA. July 9, 2010 – July 25, 2010: New American Divas, a Company whose sole mission is to produce cathartic entertainment that elevates self-esteem, self-awareness, and self-empowerment through the stories of multi-cultural women, is producing I'm An Actor, They Don't Get It, opening at the Stella Adler Theater on July 9, 2010 at 8:00 p.m. The run lasts from July 9, 2010 through July 25, 2010, running Friday and Saturday nights at 8pm and Sundays at 5pm, and features choreography by award winning choreographer Danielle Hobbs (Beyonce and Mary J. Blige).

I'm an Actor, They Don't Get It speaks to the heart of everyone who has ever had a dream; it carefully unveils to us the dyer heart and soul of the human condition, following full circle the lives of young adults as they struggle to achieve their potential - Starving Artists playing themselves. It received a triumphant workshop run under Tiffany Classics, which was met with critical acclaim by LA Weekly and the NAACP, both proving it's a Landmark in Theatre. The Opening Night event will be at the Stella Adler Theatre in Hollywood at 6773 Hollywood Blvd, 90028 and we invite you to attend the occasion.

Writer, Director, Actress Tiffany Black, St. Petersburg, Florida native, Florida State University Alum, and former writer for the FSView Newspaper embarks on the 3rd run of her first written play works, I'm An Actor, They Don't Get It. Black currently contributes articles to Essence.com through her blog, which is named after the show. I'm An Actor, They Don't Get It inspires people to live, laugh, love and NEVER give up on a dream. It sets a destination platform for the truly gifted - a launch pad for the greatest undiscovered African American entertainers and story tellers, we are very proud of this production.
